◆ Q&A

Q1: I applied for the emergency tuition exemption for spring semester. Can I assume that my application and documents will also be considered for the fall semester?

A1: No. You are asked to complete the designated procedure for the fall semester, too. Different from ordinary exemptions, decisions on approval for emergency exemptions for the spring and fall semesters will be made separately.

Q2: I have applied for (or am applying for) a financial assistance program offered by a public organization. What should I do if I haven't received the decision on my application by the Primary Submission deadline? Am I not eligible to apply for the emergency exemption?

A2: You may be eligible to apply. Be sure to submit a certificate or documentation proving that you have been accepted for (or are receiving) financial assistance from a public organization by the Secondary Submission deadline.

Q3: What are the criteria to determine that part-time work is a major source of income, in relation to the eligibility for privately funded international students (Eligibility 2. b)?

A3: If more than 50% of your income comes from part-time work, this is deemed a major source of income.

Q4: I am a current student and have already applied for tuition exemption in March. However, I would like to instead apply for these "emergency enrollment fee and/or tuition exemptions."

A4: You can change applications if you additionally submit the necessary primary documents for this application during the Primary Submission period.

Q5: Will anyone who fulfills the eligibility requirements be approved for the emergency tuition exemption once they submit the required documents?

A5: No. Tokyo Tech will evaluate applicants' academic performance, income, and assets according to our regulations — the same as for ordinary tuition exemption. Decisions on applications for emergency tuition exemption will be one of the following: "full exemption," "50% exemption," or "disapproved."
