5-1 Course Numbers

Each course is assigned a systematic course number, ranging from 100- to 600-level, which indicates the learning level and sequence.

Courses in the 400- and 500-level are master's level courses and 600-level courses are doctoral level courses. Please refer to Course Numbering System (Section 17) below for further details.

17. Is it true that the students graduate in April have more job chances than those who graduate in October?

- Many Japanese companies permit new graduates to join them in April. The number of companies that permit them to join at any time other than April 1st is very limited. But this does not mean that the students who graduate in September or October has less chance to get a job position than those who graduate in March. If you graduate in September, you need to proceed your job-hunting activities following the same recruitment schedule as for students who will join a company on April 1st of the year following your graduation year, or following the recruitment schedule of a company that permits you to join on October 1st of your graduation year or in any month through their year-round recruitment.

18. Since the N1 test contains no speaking test, the certificate of N1 and the speaking skill, which one have more influence in your consideration?

- If you have N1 level of Japanese proficiency, you will get more chances to get a job position in Japan. Many Japanese companies require students to submit Japanese documents such as CV ("Rirekisho") and "Entry Sheet," and to take job interviews in Japanese. For this meaning, it is better to have both speaking and writing skills. There are some companies that focus on technical skills rather than Japanese proficiency, but the number is limited.

19. How much percentage does the acceptance rate of international student who looking for job in Japan?

- We do not have the exact data about it. Approximately 29% of international students got job positions at companies or universities in Japan.
